University honors four Sunday

Pulitzer Prize winners, GW alumnus among distinguished guests

by Elissa Leibowitz

Managing Editor

The University will recognize four distinguished professionals with honorary degrees at Sunday's Commencement ceremony on the Ellipse.

Washington Post columnist William Raspberry, violinist Isaac Stern, Library of Congress poet laureate consultant Mona Van Duyn and Stanford University chemist Harden Marsden McConnell — who earned his bachelor's degree in chemistry from GW in 1947 — will receive honorary degrees along with keynote speaker Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala.

Raspberry is an urban affairs columnist for the Post, and his twice-weekly column is syndicated nationally. He joined the Post in 1962, having served as a reporter, photographer and editor since then. Prior to joining the Post he graduated from Indiana Central College, where he earned a bachelor's degree in history.

In 1965, Raspberry won the Capital Press Club's Journalist of the Year award for his coverage of the Watts riots in Los Angeles.

Raspberry has also taught journalism at Howard University in Washington, D.C. and has served as a Pulitzer Prize jurist. Time magazine wrote of him: "Raspberry has emerged as the most respected black voice on any white U.S. newspaper."

Stern is recognized worldwide as one of the foremost violinists of the century. He has made more than 100 recordings of 200 works by 63 composers. He has also been featured in many movies and television programs such as Fiddler on the Roof, "60 Minutes," "Live from Lincoln Center" and "Sesame Street."

Stern led the drive to save Carnegie Hall from destruction in 1960 and to restore it in 1986. He served as the hall's president for more than 30 years. He was an originating member of the National Endowment for the Arts and is now chairman of the American-Israel Cultural Foundation.

Stern has also received honorary degrees from more than 11 universities worldwide.

Van Duyn, winner of both the Pulitzer Prize and the National Book Award, joined the ranks of Library of Congress poet laureates dating back to 1937, including Robert Frost (1958-59) and Gwendolyn Brooks (1985-86). Her duties for her yearlong term include consulting and advising the library on literary matters.

Van Duyn's first book of poetry, Valentines to the Wide World was published in 1959 and was followed by six others. Two new publications are expected this year.

In addition to her Pulitzer Prize and National Book Award, Van Duyn also received the Bollingen Prize, a $20,000 grant from the NEA and the $25,000 Ruth Lilly Award. She is an Academy of American Poets chancellor and a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

Poetry magazine editor and critic Joseph Parisi wrote of Van Duyn: "From the publication of her first book, her mastery of the art was immediately apparent — her subtle intelligence and formidable technical skill, her gift of humor and satire, her formal elegance and especially her understanding of the vagaries and vulnerabilities of the human heart."

McConnell has a long history of distinguished work in the science field. He has received more than 20 awards and honors, including the National Medal of Science in 1989 and the Peter Debye Award in Physical Chemistry from the American Chemical Society in 1990. In 1971, McConnell returned to GW to receive the Alumni Achievement Award.

McConnell has worked at Stanford since 1964, having previously worked at the California Institute of Technology, for Shell Development Company and at the University of Chicago. He received his doctorate from Cal Tech in 1951.

Ceremony to be held regardless of weather

by Paul Connolly

Editor-in-Chief

This Sunday, the members of the class of 1993 will be only the second class in GW history to receive their degrees at an outdoor ceremony on the Ellipse. That ceremony will go on regardless of the weather, so participants and parents should come prepared.

Lynn Shipway, special assistant to the vice president for Administrative and Information Services, said the University would rather make definite plans for an outdoor ceremony than gamble with a backup rain plan as it did last year. As a result, Shipway advised everyone to come prepared with umbrellas and shoes suitable for soggy grass if the forecast calls for rain. "The ceremony will definitely be on the Ellipse," Shipway said.

GW has planned for the event since last year, covering just about every possible contingency. Shuttle buses will run constantly between campus and the Ellipse. Shipway advised against driving there or parking near the event. A medical tent will be set up nearby, and a sign language interpreter and earphones will also be available for the hearing impaired.

The stage will be bigger than last year, Shipway said, with new school flags hanging over it. The flags were designed by Pennsylvania artist Bob McIlhenny, the same artist who created the Lisner Auditorium banner, she said. McIlhenny also designed a 20-by-40-foot flag that will hang in Union Station Thursday through Monday.

Instead of a parade back to campus and individual school receptions like last year, two football field-size tents will be set up on the Ellipse for a reception after the 10 a.m. ceremony. In the event of extremely severe weather, Shipway said the ceremony will be shortened and moved under those tents.

Shipway said combining the usual six commencement ceremonies into one both this year and last year gives students a "much bigger bang for Commencement." To get that bang, graduates must be on the Ellipse by 9 a.m. for the 9:30 a.m. processions.

A grand party is planned for the eve of Commencement in Union Station. Shipway said more than 1,000 people have purchased tickets to the event so far. The party will feature several bands, souvenir photos, a caricature artist, magicians, fortune tellers and a cash bar. A GW alumnus who owns Oasis Vineyard in Virginia has bottled a special champagne for party-goers with a commemorative GW label, she said.

Donna Shalala leads with spunk, charisma

by Andrew Tarnoff

Asst. News Editor

"We've spent our whole careers working for this moment," Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala said of the Clinton administration. "We better seize it."

This kind of attitude is what best characterizes this year's Commencement keynote speaker and what describes her distinguished public service career. She was the first female chancellor of a Big Ten school — the University of Wisconsin-Madison — and has been called the "high priestess of political correctness" by her former colleagues at UW, according to the Washington Post.

A self-proclaimed liberal, Shalala told the Post that she will concentrate on using government to cure society's wrongs. She said she understands her budget constraints and realizes "there are limits to what you can spend."

This concept, however, is not a new one for Shalala. Working as assistant secretary for policy development and research at the Housing and Urban Development office during the Carter administration, Shalala has faced budget squeezes before. Most of the time, she said, she was working to cut the operating budget, not to add to it.

Shalala, who stands five-feet tall, has always had a self-confident attitude which commands respect. Shalala has already established herself in her position, and according to the Post article, feels no qualms about offering her position on issues, even if they are different from Clinton's. She first made news when she commented on HIV-infected Haitians trying to emigrate to the United States well before Clinton issued the official White House statement.

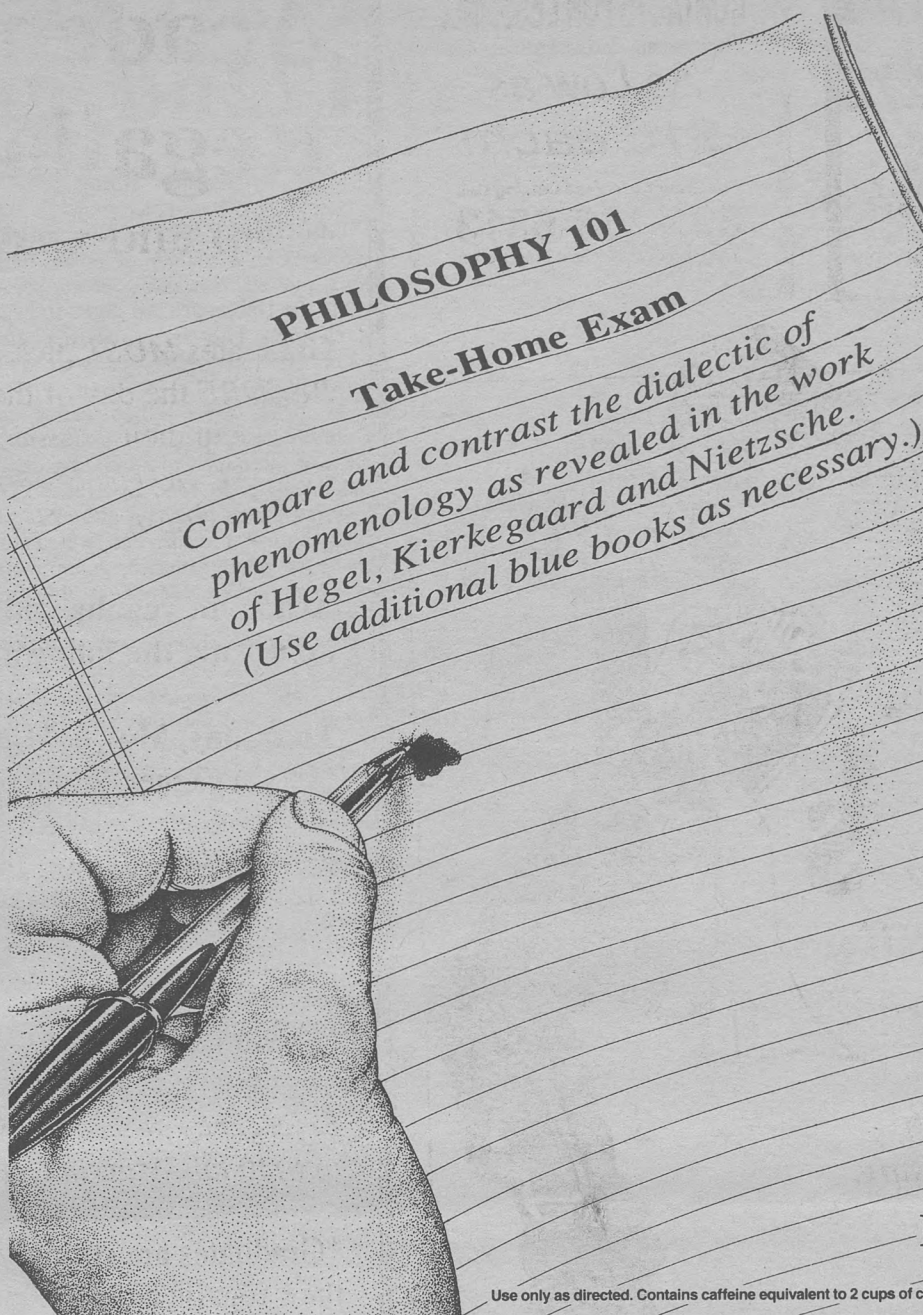

This is the kind of controversy Shalala is used to. At UW, she confronted a crowd surrounding her office when she refused to disband a ROTC unit discriminating against homosexuals.

Although she agreed with the protesters, Shalala said she could not eliminate ROTC from UW because some students relied on ROTC scholarships to pay for school. As Shalala turned away the protesters, she bought them all pizza.

Shalala, in her early fifties, has never been married, but has a wide circle of friends. Before taking the chancellor position at UW, she was the president of Hunter College in New York, a political professor at Bernard Baruch College also in New York and a politics and education professor at Teacher's College at Columbia University in New York.

Earlier in her life, Shalala served in the Peace Corps in Iran. This experience and her well-rounded background qualified her for the secretary position.

Class of '93 marks 172nd graduation

by Jennifer Batog
News Editor

GW's class of 1993 contains students representing a variety of races, religions, nationalities and genders, something the University has come to pride itself on. The faces of the first Commencement, however, were quite different.

In 1824, GW — then called the Columbian College — graduated a class of three men in a building called the Presbyterian Meeting House. The featured guest was the Marquis de Lafayette, who was invited to the country by the young American government.

Other famous names at the first commencement included President James Monroe, then Secretary of State John Quincy Adams, Secretary of War John Calhoun, Speaker of the House Henry Clay and other dignitaries including Supreme Court justices and members of Congress.

Since that first commencement, the demographics of GW's graduating classes have changed. The first female graduate, Clara Bliss Hinds, graduated from the medical school in 1887, and GW officially became co-ed in the early 1900s. In the early 1950s, GW adopted a policy against denying students' acceptance on the basis of race, religion, or gender.

The list of honorary degree recipients and commencement speakers reads like a "Who's Who" guide throughout GW's 172-year history. The University has conferred honorary degrees on such notable personalities as President Kennedy, President Coolidge and his wife — who received their degrees at the same ceremony — and President Truman, who was honored at his daughter's commencement.

GW continues to honor foreign dignitaries as well. Korean leader Syngman Rhee who was also a graduate of the University, received an honorary degree, as did the kings of Morocco and Siam and the presidents of Ecuador and Mexico.

When musician Hans Kidler received his honorary degree, graduates were spared the boredom of a long, drawn out keynote speech. Instead, the National Symphony Orchestra performed Hayden's Symphony in D major (104).

The Ellipse, where this year's Commencement will be held for the second time, is just one of the many locations GW grads have trekked to grab their piece of parchment. Other graduations have been held in the University Yard, Lisner Hall, the Smith Center, the National Theatre and Constitution Hall.
